"Pimper's All the World's Wargames" is a continuing series of listings of published board wargames. Volume 1 and its Addenda covered the years 1953-1977. This volume, the second of the series, covers the half-decade 1978-1982. I have taken a rather broadminded view of what constitutes a board wargame. Warfare per se is not a crucial requirement, though almost all games listed here are games on war- and battles. To be a board wargame, a game must involve intellectual rather than physical skill; it must not be based on one-piece-at-a-time movement rules (excluding, e.g., chess, go, or Monopoly.) In one case, the editors were confronted with a perfectly normal-looking boardgame, if one ignored the minor detail that the conflict resolution scheme involved physical combat (of a limited sort) between the players. Not without some hesitation, this title was included. Almost all board games actually have playing boards. In a few cases, the boards are highly abstract, or (e.g. Jutland, System 7) have completely disappeared.

This listing does not include miniatures rules -- rules for conducting battles or campaigns with the aid of toy soldiers ("miniature figures", to those who have outgrown H.G.Wells). It also does not include computer games, including both those distributed for use on one's own computer and those run on a central computer for distant players. Finally, this listing does not include roleplaying rules, such as Chivalry and Sorcery, in which the rules (which may even include a board) are basically intended to provide a structure for an imaginary world, not a set of rules for restaging a particular historic or ahistoric battle.

Assembling a complete list of board wargames which actually exist, verifying their existence, and obtaining a rudimentary description of each game is a difficult task. This listing, including titles for which only fragmentary information is available, is surely incomplete. In another year or two, we will probably publish an Addendum. However, there is an insubtle conflict between completeness and reasonable timeliness of publication. We have listed some games from earlier years which were overlooked both by Pimper's All the World's Wargames 1953-1977 and by its addendum.

The game listing below has two parts. Part One contains games for which detailed information was available. Part Two lists games on which information was at best fragmentary. Some of these later titles may not exist at all; others may have been planned by their alleged publisher but never released. A few titles may actually be sets of miniatures or roleplaying rules which we did not identify as such.

For each game, the title, publisher, and year of copyright are listed. Some games were not released in the year in which they were copyrighted. For foreign games, a copyright date does not always appear. We also give four bits of information about each game: the unit scale, the formation scale, the map area, and the historical period.

The "unit scale" gives the size of the force represented by a single unit counter. Identifying this size is not always easy. In games with a range of unit counters, the force size which represents the largest single part of the combat strength is selected. Thus, in Drang nach Osten/Unterschieden, in which unit counters represent everything from a single man up to an Army corps, the largest part of the force is present at the regimental level, and the game would be so identified, even though the manufacturer might have described the game as a "divisional" level game. There are significant problems with changes in the meaning of historical names. For example, many Civil War games use a "regiment" as a basic unit, though the unit in question, in modern terms, might better be described as a battalion. Games with mixed air/land/sea units, or with fantasy settings in which one army may have a lower combat factor than one heroine with enchanted sword, often require footnote clarifications. The "formation scale" gives the size of the total force commanded by a player or side, i.e. the total force represented by all of the unit counters in the game. The convention was imposed that a complete, independent land command was an "army", even though in earlier times an "army" might have numbered only a few thousand persons.

abs -- abstract; economic or power points, rather than people army -- an army
Abg -- army group
batt -- battalion
comp -- company
corps -- corps
div -- division
firetm -- fire team
fleet -- a fleet
front -- a collection of army groups ind -- individual indet -- indeterminate; not indicated natorc -- national forces, the total-ity of the armed force of a nation or alliance plat -- platoon
rgt -- regiment
ship -- a single (ocean or space) ship ships -- several vessels, perhaps only two on an unspecified number smunt -- small unit, a few people, not formally a fire team sqdn -- squadron (4-12 ships or planes) unit -- a formation of definite but unspc-cited size units -- a collection of units veh -- a land vehicle wing -- wing (25-100 ships or planes) A separate descriptor is the area of the mapboard. In increasing order of size, one has abs -- abstract
bldg -- building
fort -- a fortification
cave
btlfd -- a battlefeld, typically less than a county in size, though depending on the historical period city
country -- a country
prov -- a province
islands
nation -- one, more or less, countries theater -- several countries subcont -- sub-continent sea -- a featureless body of water. The use of "sea" implies something smaller than a whole ocean ocean -- a featureless body of water of any size cont -- an entire continent world -- a planet
aster -- an asteroid space -- outer space, volume undefined system -- a solar system cluster -- a group of stars galaxy -- a very large group of stars universe -- one or more universes Finally, to provide a historical date, the period of the game is indicated, using the descriptors anc -- ancient; prior to 1000 AD med -- medieval; 1000-1599 AD 17th -- 17th century; 1600-1699 AD

 18th -- 18th century; 1700-1783 AD
 Nap -- Napoleonic; 1784-1820 AD
 Vict -- Victorian; 1820-1913 AD
 WW1 -- World War I and its sequelae; 1913-1930 AD WW2 -- World War II; 1931-1945 AD post-45 -- 1945 to the present contemp -- contemporary; referring to events which will perhaps happen soon; e.g. WW3 in Europe, fought with presently deployed formations SF -- science fiction; the further future; outer space, spaceships myth -- mythology and fantasy, including mythical and alternate times, sorcery all of the above -- warfare through time

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The preparation of this Volume of Pimper's All the World's Wargames would have been impossible without the enthusiastic cooperation and support of wargamers and collectors from coast to coast. I would particularly like to thank:
 Darwin and Peter Bromley
 John Farewell
 Tom Owens
 for their assistance and information.
